HISTORY OF MIDLAND GOLF & COUNTRY CLUB

In 1871 the Midland and Port Hope railway picked a site for its western terminus on Georgian Bay and Midland began. Grain elevators were constructed to receive western grain by boat and shipped by rail to eastern Canada. Lumber was being cut throughout North Simcoe and up the Georgian Bay river basin and milled at Midland. Water transportation led to ship building, dry docking and dredging. Coal, metals and general commercial products were shipped to Midland in addition to grain and lumber, making Midland a busy port. The Great War accelerated this prosperity. Local boys from Simcoe County were serving and dying in the Grey and Simcoe Foresters' regiment of the Canadian contingent in France.

The year was 1879 and James Playfair, the founder of Midland Golf and Country Club, did two things right: he married Charlotte Ogilvie, the daughter of senator Ogilvie of Montreal, and he moved to Sturgeon Bay as manager of a lumber mill. Within several years he bought the mill and James Playfair was on his way. The basis of his personal wealth was earned in the lumber trade in Midland between 1883 and 1900. By 1917, as the result of his business ability and tireless energy he had become an outstanding figure in the world of Canadian business. His principal business partners in Midland were David S. Pratt, Douglas L. White, Frederick W. Grant, James Wilkinson, the Preston brothers, Edward F. Hurke, J. W. Benson, William F. Beck and George Beck. All subsequently became active charter members of the golf club.

In 1917 Midland was bursting at the seams and the principal seamstress was James Playfair. A land assembly was arranged and in July and August of 1917 James Playfair bought three parcels of land from three owners on part of concession lots 109 and 110 in the 1st concession of the township of tiny, in the county of Simcoe and the Midland Golf and Country Club had its beginning. A total of one hundred and twenty four acres were purchased at a cost of $5,326.00.

On Saturday May 31, 1919 Mr. Playfair drove the first ball from number one tee to inaugurate the opening of the club.
